About the workshop

There is an ever-increasing demand for professionals whose technical skills are complemented by skills such as teamwork, creativity, ability to adapt to change, entrepreneurship, digital skills, communication and interpersonal skills.

The VET system must meet this demand, with more and more calls for TAFE and the wider-VET sector to adapt teaching and training to deliver graduates who have these broad sets of skills.

The main objective of this two-day workshop is to look at how new learning contexts can and have been incorporated into the classroom to allow for better development of well-rounded professionals, including the development of technical skills, soft skills, entrepreneurial culture and creative thinking.

This two-day workshop will also analyse the situation in TAFE institutes in Australia.
